Schools Consent Project

Delivering comprehensive, lawyer-led workshops on consent and the law in UK schools. Through dynamic, interactive workshops they explain the role of the law in providing a clear framework for understanding rights and responsibilities, while building the skills to check for, communicate and respect boundaries, reducing the likelihood of young people experiencing - or perpetrating - sexual harm.

Tender

Working with a wide variety of organisations from primary schools to global businesses, they promote respect and equality and prevent domestic abuse and sexual violence. Their innovative, interactive approach empowers children, young people and adults with the skills and knowledge to recognise unhealthy relationships, nurture healthy ones, and seek support if they need help.

Hear from the writer

Suzie Miller on what it is to be a judge, an excerpt from the Inter Alia programme

The Latin word inter alia means ‘among other things’, it is a term used in the legal profession, but here it is also emblematic of how working women juggle their lives. Women work exceptionally hard at their jobs ‘among other things’, those ‘other things’ include having to: juggle their family lives, carry the ‘emotional load’, manage households, and be available for emergencies. As one woman told me, she lives her own life ‘in the cracks of everyone else’s lives’ while she attempts to work, organise school costumes, lunches, meals, school drop offs and manage tradespeople who need to come to the house.

There are so many invisible lines and boundaries that women must negotiate between motherhood, marriage, professional lives and being women in society. The overlap and competing expectations are challenging at best and often overwhelming. For women generally there is another layer, the social judgement of women trying to manage it all. Jessica’s character is a ‘judge’ but so too is the character of Jessica being judged: for her parenting, her choices, her work hours, her femininity, her feminism, her role as a life partner, and more. Like so many women trying to meet so many competing demands, Jessica also judges herself.

National Theatre

The National Theatre makes theatre that entertains and inspires using its creativity, expertise and unique reach. The National Theatre shares unforgettable stories with millions of audience members across the UK and around the world – on its own stages, on tour, in schools, on cinema screens and streaming at home.

World-leading artists make their best work at the National Theatre with the widest possible audience and impact. The National Theatre invests in talent and innovation on stage and off, taking seriously its role as the nation’s theatre. Of the new productions developed each year with a wide range of theatre companies, a third of that research and development resource is dedicated to shows staged at theatres outside London.
